An expensive car speeding down the main street of a small town was soon overtaken by a young motorcycle policeman. As he started to make out the ticket, the woman behind the wheel said impolitely, "Young man, I think you should know that the mayor of this city is a good friend of mine." The officer did not say a word, but kept writing. "I'm also a friend of chief of the police station," continued the woman, getting more angry. Still he kept on writing. "Young man," she persisted. "I know Judge Franklin and State Senator Peterson." Handing the speeding ticket to the woman, the officer asked pleasantly, "Tell me, do you know Peterson Right?"

"Why, no," she admitted.

"Well, that is the man you should have known," he said, heading back to his motorcycle, "I am Peterson Right."

The African elephants can boast the biggest ears in the world. They can grow as large as three-and-a half feet across. You might think that a gigantic animal like the elephant wouldn't have much to worry about, but it has its problems too. And its huge ears can help it deal with many problems ranging from pesky insects to great danger.

The ears are very effective fans that can be used to swat flies. The elephants' huge ears also help them hear everything that's happening nearby. A mother elephant can hear the approach of a dangerous lion that would kill her calves.

The elephants' great size can sometimes present a heat problem. The larger an object, the harder it is for it to lose heat. Elephants live on the hot plains of Africa, where keeping cool is not an easy task. Elephants' huge ears help them cool their bodies so they can survive in the heat. The large surfaces of the ears have many blood vessels that are very close to the surface of the skin. Blood that is closer to the surface cools more easily.

The most impressive use of the ears, though, is seen in an elephant's threat display. When trying to threaten another animal, the elephant cries out loudly and charges with both ears spread wide. This makes the huge beast look almost twice as large as it really is. Few enemies would dare to stand up to anything that colossal.

36. What is the main idea of this passage?
(A) Large ears are the result of evolution.
(B) The huge ears of African elephants help them survive in many ways.
(C) African elephants lose heat through their ears.
(D) The elephants' great size really presents a heat problem.
37. The African elephant's large ears help it _____
(A) hide. (B) cool off.
(C) find food. (D) control its calves.

38. We can conclude that if elephants did not have big ears they would probably _____
(A) see better. (B) be smaller.
(C) not live in Africa. (D) not be able to survive.
39. In the last paragraph, the author calls the elephant's threat display "impressive." This means that it is _____
(A) productive. (B) entertaining. (C) admirable. (D) ordinary.
40. The underlined word colossal in the last sentence means _____
(A) very large. (B) very angry. (C) fast. (D) very cool.
